NEWS OF THE DAY.

-Gold was steady on Saturday at 9. -In New York on Saturday cotton closed strong at 211c for uplands; sales 3018 bales. -In Liverpool cotton was active and firmer; uplands 104d, Orleans 104d; sales 20,000 bales. -Joseph Parker, the well known actor and scenic artist, died at Baltimore December 31. -A Madrid letter says the Spanish press is belligerent over the attitude of the United States on the Cuban question. -The trial of the ex-Confederate, ex-Cuban General, Thomas Jordan, in New York, has been postponed to next Saturday, when, if the grand jury is not ready, Jordan will be dis-

-A heavy immigration from Europe to this country is anticipated during the present year. In addition to the regular flow from North Germany and Sweden, great numbers are coming from Alsace and Lorraine.

-The casserole is the name by which the latest style of lady's bonnet in Parls is known-the shape is descriped as exactly that of a epan, or something like the helmet worn by the ancient Knights Templar. The hat has no brim whatever, and the crown is ornamented to the summit, with alternate bands of velvet and satin. A tulle aigrette is word in

George Hudson, formerly widely known as the "Rallway King," died in London on Thursday, the 14th December, of angina pectoris, at the age of seventy. Mr. Hudson represented Sunderland in the House of Comnong, in the interest of the Conservatives, from 1845 to 1859. In the day of his almost nnrivalled prosperity, he wielded an influence as commanding as that of John Law himself. but so little impression was made by his death on the public mind that the fact was not transmitted to America by the ocean cable.

-W. H. Barrett, the travelling salesman of a New York firm, who was convicted by a Richmond, Virginia, court of selling goods without a State license, and imprisoned on his refusal to pay the fine imposed, was brought before the Radical Judge Underwood, of the United States District Court, at Alexandria, on the 29th ult., and discharged. Judge Underwood holds that the Virginia license laws are repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. The attorney-general, who appeared for the Commonwealth, appealed from this decision to that of the United States Circuit

_The Russian Grand Duke Alexis and party are about to start on a buffalo hunt in the Northwest. The party will proceed to the North Platte Station on the ducal train, where all the servants will be left during the absence of the party on the hunt, which will take them toric. All the slenth hounds of the Governfrom the rallway some six or eight days. It is the intention of all those who go to the hunting grounds to take up a military mode of life, and dispense with luxuries, servants, carriages, &c. The journey between the North Platte and the buffale region will be made on horseback and in ambulances, and the Russians will be treated to a specimen of roughing it in winter on the plains. -Through tickets around the world are now issued, the price being $1145 in gold, and the knowledge, been tried and convicted. The running time eighty-one days. The line of Court was anxious to seize the leading men route, going westward, is from New York to of the State, whom the Radical organs de-San Francisco, say 3000 miles; San Francisco to Yokohama, 4700; thence to Hong Kong, 1600 miles; thence to Calcutta, 3500 miles; thence to Bombay, 1400 miles; Bombay to Suez, 3000 miles; from Suez, by the way of Alexandria and Brindles, to London, say 2300 miles, and from London to New York, 3200 miles. When the projected improvements of ble citizens of the State are to blame for the Indian route are carried into effect across Europe, and a great continental railroad is established, with proper branches and connections through Asia, the trip, around the world will be shorter in duration and space, and at the same time much more interesting.

-The London Times tells the story of an old "Tichborne case" which happended three hundred years ago in France. Martin Guerre married at the age of eleven, and after living with his wife ten years-during which period they had one child-he ran away. At the end of eight years a man appeared, whose claim to the long-lost Martin was at once acknowledged by the truant's wife and the rest of the family. For three years there was no question of the Adentity of the new-comer with the errant husband, and when finally it was disputed, the wife and many of the relatives affirmed it. Two trials took place, in which the conflict of evidence was remarkable, fifty witnesses on appointed in his acts or in his words. He each side giving contradictory testimony. The case was determined by the appearance of the real Martin, of whom the impostor had been an intimate associate during a long campaign. The rogue, who had thus betrayed his friend's confidence, was condemned to be hanged and burnt. -The last batch of the Tiehborne evidence to hand is interesting. The last witness ex_ amined when the mail left was Mr. Locock Webb, the chancery barricter, who drew the original "bill" for the claimant. This witness said the claimant exhibited a "perfect knowledge" of the contents of several deeds relating to the estate; but, with regard to the name of the vessel which picked him up at sea and conveyed him to Melbourne, there was some uncertainty. The claimant "thought" it was the Osprey, and no name was mentioned in the bill. The witness said, in reply to a remark of the chief justice, that the case could have been settled in a month in chancery. The chief justice strongly denounced the conduct of an attorney engaged in the case, who had printed and circulated a large number of affidavits which had been filed on behalt of ries of those races. The essays of the the plaintiff. They contained a description of last century exercised a large influence marks and peculiarities by which the claimant had been, it was said, identified by many persons. The chief justice said this was "scandalous" conduct. -The "silver streak of sea" between Dover and Calais still troubles the travelling Englishman and the excursive Frenchman. The latest proposition is to run a line of ferry And the reason is not far to seek. It lies in BE ONV STEETH NOLSETHAND plying between this city and Brooklyn or the Jersey shore, from Dover to Calais. The line is to consist of three large steamers, one of which is always to be kept in reserve. These steamers are to be four hundred and fifty feet in length, fifty feet wide at the water line, thirty-two feet in depth from deck to bottom, and propelled by paddle-wheels flity feet in diameter. They are to be driven by engines amounting to seven thousand horse power. The two wheels are to be independent in their action, so that the vessel may be turned about or brought alongside of a dock easily. On the lower deck double lines of rails will be laid, each line capable of holding fifteen railway cars. The passage is to be made in between seventy and ninety minutes. Six trips are to be made each way daily, by which it is thought some two thousand passengers and two thousand tons of goods can be transported every day. It is estimated that the three steamers will cost $2,000,000, but to enable them to land on the French coast a new dock will have to be built at Calais. The French Government has been asked to build this dock, to grant an annual subsidy of $100,-000, and other privileges. It is said by some that this line can be made ready for use in two years and a half from the time that work is begun, while others think that five years at least will be required to build the dock at Calais. A cable dispatch from Paris says that ground, all appear in this wonderful panorams the committee appointed by the French Assembly to examine the project, made a report yesterday approving it.

An Unjust Judge.

The address of Judge Bond to the confes. sing Ku-Klux prisoners, printed elsewhere, is both unjust and unbecoming. It is customary for a judge to show to a prisoner the gravity of the crime for which he has been convicted; but, even in these days of political judgeships, it is a monstrous wrong when a high judicial officer sullies the ermine and dishonors himself by wantonly maligning a people whom his forefathers, at least, respected and understood. We say, once and for all, that the crimes revealed in the course of the Ku-Klux trials

are horrible and revolting in the extreme, and cannot find any justification or excuse in the wrong-doing of the State Government and its officials. Judge Bond tells us that Ku-Kluxism, or Lynch Law, is, in some cases, justifiable. He says that, "in any other part of "the United States" the citizen "upon whom "such outrages were perpetrated, stung to "madness by the insult to his manhood, "would be swift to follow the wrong-doer "to the end of the world to make him atone "for it." In other words, circumstances may arise which warrant the individual in taking the law into his own hands. This is the declaration of Judge Bond; and the secret organization formed in the upper part of the State contemplated nothing more than his words would cover. If we understand its plan aright, it proposed to punish those guilty persons whom the courts, for political reasons, declined to touch. It did not sanction or encourage the disgusting deeds which have been described in the United States Court. These deeds are regarded with abhorrence and loathing by every intelligent citizen of the State. The culprits are, as Judge Bond admits, in a state of deplorable ignorance, and the responsibility for this ignorance he endeavors to fasten upon the Democracy of South Carolina. While he recognizes the callousness and depravity of the prisoners. who speak of "a brutal and unprovoked "murder, done by themselves, with as little apparent abhorrence as they would relate "the incidents of a picnic," he lends a willing ear to their excuse that they were forced into the Klans by the men of property, "who "held them in abject slavery." But the truth is mightier than Judge Bond's partisan rhement, all their soldiery, all their spies and informers, all their convenient witnesses, have not succeeded in connecting half a dozen respectable citizens with the whippings and ravishings in which his judicial soul delights. Scores, pay! hundreds, of citizens, of high and low degree, were arrested, but not more than two or three men, of even moderate prominence, have, to our clared to be at the head of the Ku-Klux Klan. They have not been found. And the reason is, that none other than the most ignorant and besotted of the whites of the mountain districts had any part in the acts which Judge Bond describes. The respectaforming a secret political organization, under the cloak of which ignorant men have committed crimes which bring a blush to every honest cheek. But the founders of the organization, whoever they were, are not guilty of these crimes, and detest them more earnestly than a partisan Judge can do. The outrages were confined to counties where the class of ignorant whites was numerically strong. In the low country not one act of Ku-Kluxism has been committed. But in the border-districts the men of "deplora-"ble ignorance" could not be restrained, even if their infamous behavior was generally known. The attempt was made and it failed. From Judge Bond we expected nothing but rancor and abuse, and we are not disis playing for high stakes, and, if there is any gratitude in Presidents, these Ku-Klux trials will bring him a rich and speedy reward. Others of his race, less worldly wise, have been content in the possession of the esteem and respect of their countrymen. To this old-fashioned reward of a pure and honorable life, Judge Bond, we fear, would vainly aspire.

The Modern Novel.

It is not too much to say that the modern novel is the ferm of literary art through which the creative faculty has done the most for the delight and instruction of mankind. The great epics-the Iliad, the Bible, and the Nibelungen-have, of course, in both regards, held great places in literature. Tragedy was an important element in the daily life as well as in the civilization of the Athenians. The English and German dramas are important facts in the histoupon that era, and in all times the lyric muse has touched the hearts and swayed the will of mankind. But no one of these forms of art, regarded as the means of pleasing or of teaching men, stands on the same level

boa's, similar in their general features to those | the principle that man is the object of na ture that most interests man, and that interest and sympathy among men are in the ratio of their similarity. The gods and beroes of the epos are too far from us, and their story is too grand to be entirely pleasurable. The passions of classic tragedy are entirely out of the circle of to-day's experience. The fierce curses and agonles of Prometheus on his rock, and the awful remorse of Ædipus, make us shudder and turn aside. The modern drama, powerful as it is, is cramped still by the unities and the necessities of the stage. Lyric poetry, to borrow the metaphor of its great master, is only a bee that skims along and sips its delicious honey from the flowers of life. The essay is comparatively feeble, because it is simply didactic. It is the novel which is the great drama of our every-day life. There move men and women like to ourselves. It portrays the passions, the cares, the joys that make up the life of every one of us. The great problems of the world, the misfortunes of virtue, the successes of vice, the misery of hope, the insufficiency of fruition, the longings for happiness, the sense of insecurity which darken it when present, the grim spectre of death ever present in the backas they appear to us. And on this scene, sexual love asserts itself, as it does in real life, as the central fact of society. It is no wonder, then, that the novel furnishes to all conditions of men the greatest part of their literary pleasure, and a very large part of their moral teaching. Which of us is not wiser and happier for the "Newcomes," "Vanity Fair," and "Esmond." It is because of this significance of the novel that a new one by so skilful a worker as George Eliot is an important literary event. The chance that we may, in the coming year have a pleasure such as that we had in Adam Bede, the Mill on the Floss, Romola or Felix Holt, is one by which we will all lay some store. It is impossible here to show with any particularity, by an examination of the works mentioned, what hopes they justify for the future. It is enough to say, in a general way, that they are earnest of a degree of power not found in any novel since Thackeray ceased to write. Only six chapters of Middlemarch have thus far appeared. The scene is laid at the country seat of Mr. Brooke, with whom reside his pretty nieces, Dorothea and Cella Brooke. Dorothea is full of serious, we may say, grand views of life, and prefers to Sir John Cheltam the neighborly squire, a clergyman of fifty years, Mr. Casaubon, who is engaged apon a great theological work, and who talks and writes even of the passion of love in a very rhetorical way. In the sixth chapter a Mrs. Cadwallader appears, who is matter-of-fact, clever, of incisive speech-indeed, very much of an educated Mrs. Poyser. As far as it goes, the work is well done. The squire, although he has spoken but little, is a skilfully drawn specimen of the bucolic type. The enthusiasms of Dorothea are well brought out, and Mrs. Cadwallader has only to keep her pace to give us much pleasure. Casaubon is an unnatural prig, and the surrender to him of Dorothea would be aggravating in the extreme if the reader did not see in the act the seed of the punishment that awaits her for it. There is, on the whole, nothing in these six chapters which makes us fear that George Eliot's hand has lost its cunning, or doubt that in Middlemarch our readers have much pleasure in store.

PERHAPS the Northern newspapers which have been chuckling over the statement that the residence of the late John C. Calhoun had been bought by "a respectable colored "man" will now be enterprising enough to tell the truth, which is, that the purchaser of Fort Hill was Colonel Clemson, the son inlaw of Mr. Calheun. As these presses have had the benefit of the falsehood, they may as well make the most of the contradiction. ...

fostetter's Bitters. WINTER-PROOF SYSTEMS. Thick boots and flannels are necessary at this season, but the human frame requires something more than these to render it winter-proof. The inner man, as well as the outer surface of the body, must be protected. The raw, moist, chilly winds which prevail at this season transpletce the warmest clothing, and are apt to effect the health unfavorably, both through the pores and the respiratory organs. The surest way to avert the evil is to strengthen the internal machine, and thus enable it to repel the devitalizing infinence of unwholesome weather. Earlich the blood, gently stimulate the circulation, regulate the bowels, invigorate the stomach, tone the liver, and brace the nerves with HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS, and no condition of the atmosphere, however inclement, no variation of the barometer or thermometer, however sudden, will have power to disorder the system thus fortified in advance, and put in perfect working order. Damp and cold, acting upon a sensitive or feeble organization, may produce consumption, diptheria, neuralgia, rheumatism, dyspepsia, liver complaint, low nervous fever, or intermittent fever; the importance of readering the system impervious to these two destructive elements is therefore obvious. Persons in delicate health, or who a eat all liable to be injuriously effected by atmospheric influences, should take the BITTERS daily throughout the winter and spring. In this way dangerous diseases may be warded off, and a condition of perfect health preserved by individuals of comparatively feeble physique, while those more robust, who scoff at precautions, are suff-ring the penalty of their recklessness in hospitals and sick rooms.
